III. Research Interests

- ☞ Study of the legal practice in Antiquity, the juristic papyrology in the broadest sense combined with the elements of social history and the history of mentality: legal awareness.
- ☞ My research is primarily focused on family law (with the doctoral thesis devoted to divorce in law and legal practice) and, more generally, the legal consciousness in Antiquity. Most recently I have been working on the œuvre of Dioskoros of Aphrodité, the 6th century poet and notary of Middle Egypt, trying to understand the relation between the school-acquired legal knowledge and the practical skills of a notary in the everyday-use of the law (I have tried illustrating these issues also in the essays devoted to the alternative dispute resolution in the Late Antiquity).
- ☞ I have also worked on the Campanian legal practice as presented in the wax tablets from Herculaneum and Puteoli (publishing articles on the function of stipulation and stipulation of slaves in these texts). Most recently I have devoted a study to liability for latent defects in the late antique papyri, using as a comparison material the Herculean slave sales.
- ☞ One of the key problems I have dealt with has also been the legal standing of women in the Graeco-Roman Antiquity.
- ☞ Most recently I have turned to the trial procedure in Roman and Byzantine Egypt.
