III. Research

III.1 Chief Scientific Interests

study of the legal practice, the juristic papyrology in the broadest sense combining with the elements of social history and the history of mentality. My research is primarily focused on family law (with the doctoral thesis devoted to divorce in law and legal practice) and, more generally, the legal consciousness in Antiquity. Most recently I have been working on the œuvre of Dioskoros of Aphrodité, the 6th century poet and notary of Middle Egypt, trying to understand the relation between the school-acquired legal knowledge and the practical skills of a notary in the everyday-use of the law. Part my research I have dedicated to the legal standing of women in Antiquity: both family law and juristic papyrology are obvious fields of investigation for these subjects. I have also worked on the Campanian legal practice as presented in the wax tablets from Herculaneum and Puteoli.

III.2 Research grants
